

Our main tool for keeping sprints in schedule were our standups and meetings. These gave us a way to see our current progress, and make estimations on how much more time we would need. We also story pointed our user stories at the beginning of each sprint to make better estimations of how much of a workload we were taking on.